TUMBLEPAD

Jason's father jumped up and ran around the bathroom three times and went back to bed. Jason said, "This house is going crazy. I am going to do something." So he got a long rope and tied one end to his father's bed and one end to his father's big toe.

Jason went to sleep:
ZZZZZ---ZZZZZ---ZZZZZ---ZZZZZ

He woke up! He heard a sound. He said, "What's that? What's that? What's that!"
He opened the kitchen door ...

Addison Addley and the Things That Aren't There

It's just that I choose not to waste my brain on school stuff. Personally, I think I've got more common sense than anybody I know, except for the guy at the gas station where I buy my worms. He's got to be pretty smart to make people pay for those slimy creatures. I'd probably make a great worm seller.

If I could think of a really great topic, I might be able to just make up the speech right while I was saying it. No sense wasting energy, I told myself as I brushed my teeth. Let me get that straight. I wasn't really brushing them, just giving them a quick scrape and then pretending they were clean. Sometimes I just let the water run and then I spit as loudly as I can into the sink to make it sound like I'm brushing them. I always pay for it at the next trip to the dentist though. Things have a disgusting way of catching up to you. In the back of my mind I knew I should be brushing longer. But that's where the thought usually stays — in the very back of my mind, where it belongs. This was definitely going to be a quick-scrape day.

I spit one more time and closed my eyes, trying to force a quarter of my brain into action.

"Breakfast!" Mom called from downstairs.

Saved by the yell. That was enough work for now anyway. Little did I know that by the time breakfast was over, I'd have my incredible topic. And how was I to know that, like dirty teeth, fractions have a disgusting way of catching up to you?
